I Have A Dream...

Going on this past J-teen trip to Charleston, South Carolina on Martin Luther King weekend opened up my eyes to the wonderful culture of Charleston and the dreams that Martin Luther King Jr shared for the country. While in Charleston, we went to many different amazing organizations that are helping their community. I was so honored and excited to be a part of these small steps that were taken for a world that Martin Luther King Jr. would have wanted. Going on this trip made me think about my dreams and how I can take small steps to reach them. I have a dream... that after college I will be accepted into Medical school or Veterinary school. I want to help save the lives of the people or animals. This goal is not my only one, I have a dream that all people feel like they are equal to one another. I know this dream may take long and be hard to achieve but with more people involved, I think we can change the world, one step at a time. This past jteen trip made me realize that my dreams and other people's dreams can truly change the world.
